Mountain of Pain (Alex Kazinsky) Thomas Caldwell

Whilst on holiday in Rio, Alex Kazinsky spots an old flame queuing for the rack rail headed to the summit of Mount Corcovado. Impulsively, he drives his hired jeep to the top of the mountain. He finds her, but hurt as he is by her lackluster response to seeing him, nothing compares to the dramatic events that follow. First, the old man he is travelling with is stabbed by a complete stranger on the crowded mountain top. Then the man escapes on a hang glider, only for Kazinsky to throw himself on top of the flimsy aircraft's wing, just as it floats away from the lofty peak. Miraculously Kazinsky survives, but later at the hospital, his murdered traveling companion's body disappears from the hospital morgue. Little does Kazinsky know it, but these events will eventually transport him to eastern Turkey, on the deadliest journey of his career as a mercenary. What lies on Mount Ararat? Noah's Ark. Or something even more incredible?
