Summer Love In the Big City The New York Times

The Metro staff of The New York Times traveled the five boroughs to find stories of summer romance. One couple's relationship blossomed while sharing their love of roller coasters, for another it was their love of handball and for another it was swing dancing. For some, love demanded patience, for others it happened in an instant. And the lessons that can be learned from the stories recounted here: Most couples break up at one point or another. Men move slowly. Parents' opinions matter. And food plays a major role in love.
