"Why me God"? This is a question that SHE asks her self time and time again. The bondage of her past clings to her like the residue of a cheap band aid long removed. SHE often thinks about where it all began. Why do those rusty ole chains rattle the loudest when dealing with the opposite sex? He says..."Trust me boo. I will never hurt you!. SHE looks deep in his eyes and nods in agreement wanting so badly to believe but her thoughts SCREAM..." Negro please! Yeah right! I can't trust you! You say this but the last one said the same....as a matter of fact, the one before said the same..."Her mind then reverts back to the very first relationship that set the standard of all men....her father..." The pages that you are about to read contains the inner workings of my heart. It is my intention to reach young women worldwide who have experienced the tragedy of molestation, rape, low self esteem, & all other manifestations of abuse. These poetic writings will be the water that will provide nourishment for your thirsty hearts. You are not alone and there is life after the tragedy. Meet me at the well. Enjoy!
