The Great Leeds Pub Crawl Simon Jenkins

Join the Yorkshire Evening Post's award-winning beer writer Simon Jenkins on a journey which criss-crosses Leeds, calling in at dozens of his favourite pubs. As well as descriptions of the beers, the pubs, and some of his adventures along the way, The Great Leeds Pub Crawl also features articles on local history, the history of brewing in the city, and suggests plenty of alternative routes which will keep even the thirstiest pub crawler satisfied. If you keep your eyes peeled and your wits about you, you might also spot the answers to some of the clues in his devilishly tricky treasure hunt too... For almost 20 years, Simon Jenkins has been writing about pubs and beer for the Yorkshire Evening Post. In the meantime he has held down a number of different roles on the paper from restaurant, TV and theatre critic to sub-editor and page designer. At various times he has also written for the Goole Chronicle, Selby Times, the Leeds United Newspaper, Halifax Evening Courier, Yorkshire Post – and contributed articles for publications as varied as the New Statesman and the Tesco magazine. In 2006, Simon joined the press office at the University of Leeds, but continues to contribute his Taverner column to the YEP every Thursday. Over the past 15 years, Simon has won numerous awards from the British Guild of Beer Writers, including their highest accolade, British Beer Writer of the Year, in 2010. In his spare time he follows the varied fortunes of both Leeds United and Oxford United, he runs kids' football training at the Yorkshire Post Sports Club in Headingley, and is on the board of governors at a local primary school. And despite his love of beers from all over the world, he occasionally likes a glass of red wine too. Simon lives in north Leeds with his wife and teenage children. You can follow his thoughts on any number of randomly-selected subjects on Twitter @jenkolovesbeer
