Hoplit Elementary Episode 2: The Masters of Cake Minique Morado

Being a student in the prestigious but mysterious Hoplit Elementary means there is a 50 percent chance of a horrible death and a 100 percent chance of being included in some weird little adventures that may or may not leave you an insane shell of your former self. The question is will our four zany protagonists be able to handle it? Hoplit Elementary is a story about four short mischievous furry creatures called hoplits who are looked at as planet Rodemus's brightest race. The titular boarding school was created to develop new generations of mad scientists and also to create kooky inventions from ray guns and robots to portals to different dimensions and world-destroying weapons of mass destruction. Also unbeknownst to students, the school houses some of the hoplit race's darkest secrets. Though hoplits are generally geniuses our four buddies are...how do I put this lightly? Well they're idiots and this lack of common sense, and their ambitious schemes to escape boredom ends up putting them in the middle of or causing the school's absurd situations. Will these four best friends snap from the stress of all of this and end up in a white padded room somewhere before they graduate, will they even live? Well only time will tell. In this episode the four knuckleheads kill their cooking teacher with a poisoned cake. In order to fix their mistake and avoid a long prison sentence, the friends seek out the Cake of Life, a cake said to be able to bring back the dead. So they set out seeking the Masters of Cake, the only people who know the secrets of the Cake of Life, and discover if the cake is real or if it is a lie. Have a seat, and enjoy the mayhem and cartoon violence of Hoplit Elementary. (Also you can read this episode out of order.)
