These stories don't exactly fit together, they're not meant to. It's no series of events, it's sort of just a tragic tangle of things. A bit like life really, one thought after another is thrown at you and you have to find a way to process that, it's not easy but once you get into the flow of things you'll start to realise you wouldn't have it any other way. If your mind needs a walk, read "No Bad Days" it's a random collection of irrational thoughts.

A book about all those fucked up emotions you had when you were growing up, the ones that made you itch until you were physically sick, the ones that still haunt you and continue not to make any rational sense. The stories that define you, shape you and tell your individual experience on this earth in perhaps a different order of words than you expected. Stories to help you understand, stories to make you stop blaming or pointing fingers. Stories to help you move on.
